The Palmer–Warner House
An old home that can tell a thoroughly modern story

By David Holahan

Being older than the nation, the 1738 Palmer–Warner House, which is on Town Street and owned by Connecticut Landmarks, presents museum professionals with a challenge: how to tell all of its stories and which ones to prioritize.

One of the stories herein distinguishes the East Haddam property from all but a handful of house museums nationwide. Its most recent private owners, Frederic Palmer and Howard Metzger, lived there as a couple from the mid-1940s until Palmer’s death in 1971. Metzger continued to live there until his death in 2005.

Many of their letters and Palmer’s diary have survived, which is not always the case with historic archives belonging to same-sex couples from that era. During virtually all of the time that Palmer and Metzger lived together in East Haddam, homosexuality was illegal in Connecticut. The American Psychiatric Association considered it a mental illness until 1973.

Residents make adjustments to the new reality

Students are studying online (aka distance learning) from home, restaurants and coffee shops are doing takeout meals, the opening of the Goodspeed’s season has been delayed, and one fitness center is trying outdoor classes and guided hikes to ward off cabin fever. Shagbark Lumber & Farm Supply was open for business but customers could also get their lumber (etc.) to go—by calling ahead, (860) 873-1946.

See pages 2 and 3 for updates from East Haddam’s representatives in Hartford.

The East Haddam Board of Finance announced the cancellation of the following town budget events: public hearing on April 7; town meeting on April 21; and budget referendum on May 5. The announcement added: “It is our hope that the budget process will resume in the near future in accordance with any requirements or Executive Orders set forth by the State of Connecticut and the Governor.”

One constant is that things are changing, sometimes daily. This article may be out of date before our readers get it.

The latest updates from the town government and the school district are on their respective websites. “Everything is on the website,” East Haddam First Selectman Rob Smith stressed. “Town offices are closed, public works is closed, we’re doing meals on wheels, we’re still doing brown bags for seniors if they sign up the day before. We’re doing the food bank. Students are getting food now. The biggest issue for people is apparently trash. Right now the transfer station is open on Saturday from 7 to 4. Everything is in a state of flux; things may change.

A message on COVID-19 from State Sen. Needleman

From Norm Needleman, State Senator, 33rd District

As of Tuesday, March 17, the towns of Chester, Deep River, Essex, Haddam, Old Saybrook, Portland and Colchester have declared a State of Emergency, in addition to the State of Connecticut. This will allow them to take steps to fight the spread of this virus. Though these are difficult times, we must remain calm. As the COVID-19 viral outbreak continues, it is imperative that we learn as much as we can to keep ourselves safe. Please utilize the following resources for further education.

Restaurants, Bars, Schools Closed

In an effort to prevent public gatherings that could rapidly spread the coronavirus, Governor Ned Lamont announced that all restaurants and bars in the state must close by 8 p.m. last night. Restaurants can continue operating carryout and delivery sales. This was part of a regional agreement with the Governors of New York and New Jersey, as it’s believed the tristate percent of activities.

Schools Closed

In an effort to prevent public gatherings, the Connecticut River and will be adding to this selection. Let our knowledgeable staff guide you through our great selection of fine wines.

Additionally, Governor Lamont announced that beginning Tuesday, March 17, all public schools in the were to be closed for at least two weeks. While these closures continue, school districts are launching efforts to ensure students will be able to access breakfast and lunch options such as meal deliveries and meal pickup times. Please consult your local school website for more information.

Unemployment and Layoffs

Unfortunately, we are learning an increasing number of businesses will be laying off staff and reducing hours, adding stress to an already stressful time. According to the Department of Labor, if you are a worker or business owner needing to file unemployment, please follow these steps.

If you are a worker: Please visit www.filectui.com to file for unemployment and please do so as soon as possible. It is important to file as soon as you become unemployed. Further information is available at that website or emailing dol.webhelp@ct.gov.

If you contract COVID-19 and need to take time off work, or are fired, you may file for unemployment benefits. You may also file for unemployment benefits if you are required to self-quarantine, your employer closes during this outbreak or a family member becomes ill. The outcome will depend on a case-by-case basis. If your employer only permits you to work part-time instead of full-time or you work multiple jobs and your full-time employer closes, you may be eligible for partial unemployment.

If your employer retaliates against you for filing unemployment, you may file a complaint under the Connecticut Unemployment Compensation Act.

The Department of Labor is also suspending federal work search programs requiring unemployment recipients to meet one-on-one for assistance and is suspending work search requirements for unemployment benefits. Furloughed employees are eligible for at least six weeks of benefits.

If you are an employer: If one of your employees is sick with COVID-19, you can require them to stay home, though you should issue them an Unemployment Separation Package. If you must close your business due to illness or quarantine, please direct your employees to www.filectui.com. While you would be liable for unemployment benefit charges, if a disaster is declared, you may not be liable.

The Department of Labor does offer a SharedWork program for employers seeing business slowdown. This is an alternative to a layoff, allowing employers to reduce full-time employees’ wages by up to 60 percent while workers collect partial unemployment. All employers with at least two full-time or permanent part-time employees can participate. A reduction of work must be between 10 and 60 percent of activities.

More details, including information about paid sick leave, wages and hours, and family medical leave, can be found at www.ctdol.state.ct.us/ DOLCOVIDFAQ.PDF.

Small Business Express Loans

For the roughly 800 small businesses currently owing loan payments to the state’s Small Business Express program, the Department of Economic and Community Development announced last week it will defer loan payments for three months to businesses impacted by COVID-19. The agency is also trying to accommodate other businesses with DECID loans impacted by the virus.

Small businesses and nonprofit organizations in Connecticut that have been negatively impacted by the global COVID-19 outbreak are now eligible for disaster relief loans of up to $2 million from the U.S. Small Business Administration.

Small businesses can learn more about the program and apply for financial assistance at www.sba.gov/disaster, or call the SBA at 1-800-659-2955.

Small businesses with questions about this SBA loan program or other assistance for a period of 14 days, as you may be infectious during this time. This means you should work to remain

Dear Neighbors,

The outbreak of coronavirus in Connecticut has triggered some confusion about where to go for information and resources. I urge all residents to visit www.ct.gov/coronavirus for the latest updates on the state’s response. This website has public health information and resources, helpful links for employees and employers disrupted by the outbreak, and guidance points for a variety of groups—from childcare providers to consumers. The Governor’s daily updates on the situation as it evolves are posted there, too, as well as a listing of the executive orders he has issued.

As part of the General Assembly’s efforts to prevent the spread of the coronavirus, we have postponed legislative activity until March 30. The Legislative Office Building and State Capitol Building are undergoing a thorough cleaning during the closure. House and Senate legislative leaders of both parties have continued to meet and discuss how to address looming committee deadlines for bills and how we can conduct legislative business without risking public health.

I am still available to help during this time. Please contact me at irene.haines@housegop.ct.gov if you have questions or concerns about state government or have questions about resources available from state agencies. I am also sharing updates from local and community organizations as I get them on social media www.facebook.com/RepHaines34 and on my website at www.RepHaines.com.

There is a wealth of federal, state, local and community resources available — with patience I am confident we can weather this outbreak. Do not hesitate to contact me if you need help working with your state government.

in one room if possible and limit your interactions with other people in your home, preferably using a separate bathroom from others as well. As of now, medical professionals believe you can leave quarantine after 14 days if you do not develop symptoms, or three days after you recover from symptoms you potentially develop.

You can do your part to help limit the spread of this virus and help protect yourself, your family and your friends, neighbors and community. It is believed the coronavirus can spread very easily, even if you are not showing symptoms. That makes it important for us to limit our contact with one another during this challenging time through the use of social distancing. By using this tool to limit our interactions with others, we can slow the spread of coronavirus and make sure individuals who experience serious symptoms if infected have opportunity to access the medical care they need.

These simple steps involve staying away from crowded places, especially indoors; practicing good hygiene, most importantly washing hands with soap and water, or hand sanitizer if no soap is available, for at least 20 seconds; reducing our face-to-face contact with other people; avoiding people who are coughing or showing other symptoms of illness; and staying home and isolating ourselves if we start to show symptoms of coronavirus. If you do need to go out in public or in crowded places, please take steps to stay at least six feet away from other people, as this will lower the odds of passing on the virus.

You can still leave your home or go outside, but please limit your proximity and interactions with other people. It will take time for the impact of these actions to become visible, but please continue doing them. They will play an important role in protecting yourself and others.

On Saturday (March 21) MoreFit had planned a guided hike at Hurd State Park in Haddam as well as an outdoor Blast and Trim class on Monday March 23 for its members outside its Creamery Road location in the Village. As of late last week, state parks and forests were open.

MoreFit owner Maryla Radziszewski said her customers had requested these outdoor activities. "I tell people that movement is so important to the immune system," she said. "That's why we are doing what we're doing. To encourage people to move and to eat healthy, to strengthen the immune system so the body can fight the virus."

Last week On The Rocks Restaurant began featuring a "Pick up & Togo menu" Thursday through Saturday from 3 to 8 p.m. and Sunday from 1 to 6 p.m.; people can call (860) 434-6644 X 306 starting at noon to order. Starting today (March 26) the restaurant has added additional menu offerings geared to families with selections like shepherd's pie aimed at feeding four to six people. "This is aimed at people who are home with the kids and instead of ordering six or seven different things, they can order a single bulk order," said Lisa Staron, director of clubhouse operations.

Higher Grounds in the Village is featuring take-out meals for breakfast and lunch as well as local deliveries. On Fridays, it is also offering takeout dinner meals until 8 p.m. Customers pick up their meals from the drive-through window; Call (860) 615-6112.

Ballek’s Garden Center is open. "We are maintaining our social distancing and cleaning our door knobs every fifteen minutes," said Nancy Balk. "We have grab and go outside, where people can order their stuff and we put it outside for them to pick up. We’re doing more deliveries, too." The number is (860) 873-8878.

Last week, this was part of a post on the GoodSpeed Musicals website: "South Pacific is scheduled to begin on April 17. It is clear that we will not be able to open on time. However, given the ever-changing guidelines from federal and state agencies, we are not certain how long we will need to delay the show. As soon as we have determined when it is safe to open the show, we will contact all ticket holders and make arrangements for you to exchange tickets into a future performance."

The monthly Stop the Bleed courses have been cancelled until further notice.

Dick Everett and Frederic Palmer: when two preservationists meet

In 1956, soon after Dick Everett and his wife Mary bought their historic house on Town Street, up the road a piece from the Palmer–Warner House, Frederic Palmer paid them a visit. Half of the couple’s house, after all, was older than Palmer’s, which dated to 1738.

“He was curious about what Mary and I planned to do with the house,” Everett recalled. Both men were knowledgeable and passionate about preserving old homes. It was the start of a long friendship.

“We went to a lot of dinner parties at his house, pretty high scale, with all kinds of people, who are dead now,” Everett said. “Howard did the dinners; he was an excellent cook. They [the guests] were antique dealers from all over New England. I’d get business from those dinners. They knew what I did. I was the only one in this area doing it.”

What Everett did and still does at 89, among other preservationist talents, is to forge period-appropriate iron hardware for historic houses, like his and the Palmer–Warner House. He fashioned the hardware and also did structural work on many old houses, including the Hempsted Houses in New London and the Buttolph–Williams House in Wethersfield, which are now owned by Connecticut Landmarks.

“Frederic was kind of a neat guy. I got a lot of work from him,” said Everett, who also worked at the Palmer–Warner House itself, keeping Frederick’s collection of vintage cars, including a Rolls Royce or two, up and running.

He and Howard Metzger shingled the Palmer–Warner roof. “Howard was very clever, he could be up on the roof shingling with me and cooking a gourmet supper at the same time,” Everett recalled. “He was amazing. He was really into his gardens. They were a couple. It just doesn’t seem to have worked from him, “ said Everett, who also worked at the Palmer–Warner House itself, keeping Frederick’s collection of vintage cars, including a Rolls Royce or two, up and running.

Palmer–Warner House: An old home with a contemporary story

Wynn and Shepard were active in local civic affairs and Shepard had served as a bomber pilot during World War II.

Shaelyn Amaio is an exhibit and interpretative planner for Connecticut Landmarks (CTL), the nonprofit preservation organization that owns the Palmer–Warner House, the Amasa Day House, and nine other historic properties in the state. She is exploring ways to tell the story of Frederic Palmer and Howard Metzger.

In a recent interview with the East Haddam News, she talked about how CTL is approaching the development of exhibit and program space that will be housed in the newly resurrected barn on the 50-acre property.

“We think the most relevant stories for today’s audience are about that twentieth century history, including the story about Frederic’s and Howard’s relationship,” she said. “It will address how they lived here, how they made a life here, how they existed within the East Haddam community. It’s really a special story that we feel privileged to be able to tell.”

She added that part of that effort would involve...

Erin Farley, who is Connecticut Landmarks Collections Manager and Palmer–Warner Project Manager, said that another important story that the exhibits will tell is Frederic Palmer’s extensive preservation work on historical buildings, including the Goodspeed Opera House and a number of CTL’s own properties. He also did preservation work for the First Church of Christ, Congregational in East Haddam.

Palmer served as the Chairman of the Structural Committee of the Antiquarian & Landmarks Society, which later became Connecticut Landmarks. His mother and he purchased the East Haddam home in 1936 and he provided in his will for it to be eventually donated to the nonprofit organization.

“Frederic was instrumental in restoring the Hempsted Houses in New London,” Farley said. “He also restored the Buttolph–Williams House in Wethersfield and convinced people to donate houses, like the Amasa Day House, the Isham-Terry House in Hartford and the Butler–McCook House in Hartford. This is why this [Palmer–Warner] is such a great house, because it has so many connections to...”

Palmer–Warner House tells its story

She added that Howard Metzger was an accomplished gardener and that one goal for the property is to restore his extensive landscaping, which included some whimsical topiary that resemble, well, it’s not quite clear, cats perhaps. “They were very lovely and a little bit terrifying,” Farley said with a laugh. See accompanying photo.

There is no timeline as yet for transforming the interior of the barn into exhibit space and a welcome center, Amaio said, adding that CTL is waiting to hear about several grants it has applied for while the preliminary exhibit planning is underway. Meanwhile, Farley is continuing her inventory of the contents of the house, including the letters between Palmer and Metzger and Palmer’s diary.

The Palmer–Warner House is open for staff-led, behind-the-scenes tours of groups of eight or fewer, from May through October between 10 a.m. and 3 p.m. on the first Saturday and third Tuesday of the month. Reservation must be made seven days in advance: palmer.warner@ctlandmarks.org. The cost has been lowered this year to $25 per person and $20 for East Haddam residents and CTL members. The Amasa Day House is also open, with the same stipulations and times as above, at $13 per person, $10 for East Haddam residents and CTL members.
