Courses:

- The International Political Economy of Finance, Spring 2019

Enrolment: 40 Median evaluation: 4.25 / 5

This course introduced students to the politics of the international monetary system. The first phase of the course covered the basic tenets of finance and the institutions that govern financial markets. The second phase reviewed the major theoretical approaches to international monetary relations. The final phase looked at how international governance arrangements have evolved since the early 20th century.

- Politics, Risk, and Banking Crises, Spring 2019

Enrolment: 6 Median evaluation: 5 / 5

This course introduced students to the politics of banking and bank risk in particular. The first phase of the course covered the basic tenets of financial risk and how private and public institutions manage it. The second phase covered the governance of specific types of bank risk, including credit risk, liquidity risk, foreign exchange risk, settlement risk, and systemic risk. The final section covered the politics of major banking crisis episodes, including the crises in Latin America and Eastern Europe in the 1980s, the East Asian crisis of the 1990s, and the global financial crisis.
