A Letter from the Author

Till this present time, I have written quite a number of manuscripts. If I can be a little more precise, I have written about 18 manuscripts. From Take up the Challenge to Understanding the Power of Decision; from Recognizing Opportunities to Making Friendship Work, among numerous others. One thing really seems to stand out in my writing career. God always puts me to the test of every subject I write on.

Some of my books I wrote after going through certain challenges. There are some I wrote while in the very midst of those challenges; I equally wrote a few others prior to the situations. Whichever way it happens, I usually have a practical experience of virtually every topical issue I write on.

If I were asked to literally write a book on understanding the potency of vision, I really don't think I would have been able to write anything. But, because I've practically experienced a season of loss of vision, that makes it far easier for me to be able to write a few pages.

Between late 2008 and mid 2009, I went through a season of confusion and disillusionment. Nothing really was working for me, both personally and ministerially. In fact, because of the beclouding conditions and the overwhelming challenges, I literally lost my vision for the ministry and I was found in the opposite direction of my place of assignment. Just as Jonah ran away from his place of assignment because he felt so disgusted with the whole thing, I was equally discouraged and entirely disillusioned. I felt like packing up and doing something else since I was really not making any headway in the pastoral ministry.

While I was still in that state, the Word of the Lord came to me in the form of a sermon topic, which I then preached in a friend's church on a

Sunday, in March, 2009. By Monday, a day following, the inspiration further came for me to beef up the message and preach it in a series. Before I realized it, the book you are holding eventually ensued.

I strongly believe that no one is immune to disillusionment and discouragement. They are an integral part of life. They usually come to test our conviction over our vision. Everyone faces discouragement in life. Even great folks groan a couple of times. I want to encourage you never to give up on your dream no matter what you face in the present moment. Even if you've given up your vision just like I did, never mind. If the Lord restored me, He will surely restore you too. Virtually all the principles I share in this book are some of the tools the Lord used to restore me in those dark days. If you equally apply them, they'll surely work wonders for you as concerning the fulfilment of your vision.
