What are Visitation Services?

Supervised visitation is when the noncustodial parent can visit with the child only when supervised by another adult. It is used to keep the child safe and support the parent/child relationship at the same time. If supervised visitation is necessary, the court will order it and it will be a part of the parenting plan. A special type of visitation is a Supervised Therapeutic Visit. In these visits, the parent has developed goals and receives coaching and feedback during and after the visit to help them reach their parenting goals. Hempfield supervised visitation and supervised therapeutic visitation can be provided on-site or in the community.

Benefits

Hempfield facilities are formally single-family homes that lend themselves to a natural visit between a parent and child. All visitation rooms have comfortable amenities, developmental materials and toys, and an available kitchen. The visitation services were designed by a licensed psychologist with 30-years of experience as an expert in child-welfare matters. Using Hempfield allows the visitation service information to include, not only factual observations, but reports of parent success with therapeutic coaching. Parents and the court can get feedback on interactions in four supportive parenting domains (affection, responsiveness, encouragement and teaching) that are closely related to child wellbeing. Hempfield is a member of the Supervised Visitation Network Worldwide and meets all standards of that organization including qualified and trained staff and required commercial insurance.

Referrals

Referrals are accepted by order of the court or a child protective agency that has custody of the child. Self referrals are welcome.

Fee

The 2019 fee for visitation services is $100/hour and therapeutic visitation is $150/hour. Hempfield may provide scholarship funds in hardship cases at its sole discretion.
