

Sunshine Committee

Hello Everyone!

I sincerely hope everyone is doing well. I have not heard from anyone to let me know if someone is not feeling well or has been under the weather. I can't report to you if I don't know. So I hope this finds all of you well and hope to see you at the Sunday meeting in July. Be well everyone.

What's Lurking Behind Electrical Panels?

by John Bisset

One of the nicest things about the NAB Show is catching up with old friends you don't get to see the rest of the year. Steve Franko falls into that category for me. Steve is a contract engineer for two groups of stations in Idaho. Many of his sites are inaccessible for part of the year due to snow; routine maintenance often is abbreviated.

Recently Steve was called to a high-power FM that was off the air. He discovered a burned breaker panel that had gone bad on a three-phase circuit. The transmitter had promptly shut down after losing one of the phases.

The green corrosion and burned wires can be seen on the middle wire. The damage resulted from a not-quite-tight connection from the original installation.

Time marches on and so do its offspring: heat and corrosion. Steve said the owner was lucky that only the wire and not the entire box burned.

Let this be a warning to tighten all electrical connections every couple of years, at least. The services of a licensed electrician are well worth the investment, considering what could happen. Power panel connections do become loose over time, especially in installations using aluminum wiring.

Electrical Safety Tip: tighten all electrical connections every couple of years .

(Gee—looks like the right battery terminal of my car battery. Not to worry I am cleaning it this weekend.
