

SUNDAY MORNING MEDITATION

I wonder if there's anyone who's been a Christian for years who doesn't sometimes grieve because of lost opportunities to serve our beloved Master. Who hasn't felt the ache of regret, on looking back, that he or she didn't have the moral courage to go all out for Christ? I read the biographies of heroic men and women who have been greatly used by God with a mixture of admiration and sorrow—admiration for their beautiful, triumphant faith; sorrow because I didn't have the moral stuff to be in their company. There's not a touch of pride in my sorrow, as if I wanted to be "somebody" in the Kingdom. Maybe that was the case at one time. No. What makes me so sad now is the thought that my Savior, who deserves all of my "heart, soul, mind and strength," has gotten so little of my best time and effort. All for Jesus, Richard
