

Kim Klein

Children's Garden Farmer

An avid recycler, proud "second hand/ used" purchaser of any and all "needed" things, a nature lover, and an empathetic heart to all living creatures without a voice, farmer/ gardener Kim Klein returns to heritage creek for her second year, starting at the onset of the 2017 season curating and cultivating the children's garden.

A bachelor's degree from art college and 20 years of self employment as a decorative, artistic and faux finish painter and surface embellisher, will facilitate Kim's eye for aesthetics, and mindful sustainable choices for everyday living, as she incorporates art projects and installations in the children's garden, while getting creative with planting the veggies. She is most passionate about living and eating healthfully and sustainably.

She sees the potential of the children's garden projects as a means for the children attending camp to be supported in their healthy growth. Exposure to and connections in creative, meaningful, purposeful, and beautiful work, she sees, as fundamental to children, her daughter included, in their striving to reach their life's fullest potential and capacities, while living with thoughtfulness, compassion and respect.
