Doctor Driven Practices

Every Patient, Just Like
Every Tooth, Is Unique

Doctor Driven Practices

Every Patient, Just Like Every Tooth, Is Unique

When you look for a dentist, you want an office that cares about developing lasting relationships, trust and respect with their patients. Three dentists found themselves working together at a corporate dental chain in Texas. As their careers took their course, they soon discovered they shared the same vision to own their own practice. While they certainly learned a lot from working in the fast-paced corporate setting, they didn't care for its cookie-cutter approach to patients nor their practice. They understood that every patient, just like every tooth, is unique. To them, it wasn't all about profitability but about building a solid foundation of trust grounded in quality care and impeccable customer service.

One by one, Yong Ho Cho, D.D.S., Ali Albeer, D.D.S., and Hiren Patel, D.D.S., branched out and purchased a practice of their own. They took with them the best parts of working together and their shared passion for cultivating patient relationships. They even cater to patients who have busy lives by offering early morning, lunch and Saturday appointments.

“These doctors actually care about their patients,” said David Silber, D.M.D., an associate cosmetic dentist who often works with these three dentists as needed. “They work by appointments and they respect their patients. That’s something you don’t find these days.”

Meet the Dentists

Yong Ho Cho, DDS | Revive Dental

Yong Ho Cho, D.D.S., wanted to be a dentist ever since he was in high school in California. Some of his closest friends’ parents were dental specialists, and he was able to visit their offices and observe on multiple occasions. “I knew what I was getting myself into instead of realizing that it wasn’t my cup of tea after going through all the education,” he shared.

Dr. Cho earned his dental degree in 2011 from the University of the Pacific, Arthur A. Dugoni School of Dentistry in San Francisco, California, before moving to Texas. He credits his school’s humanistic approach to dental students for helping him learn the value of respecting everyone around you, including your patients. In fact, when asked to describe himself using only three words, Dr. Cho humbly picked the following adjectives: passionate, caring and respectful.

It is this passionate, caring and respectful approach that has helped Dr. Cho grow his practice at Revive Dental inside the Irving Mall in Irving, Texas, since he took ownership in September 2014. He appreciates being in a shopping mall setting because of the convenience factor to patients and because it takes the stigma out of ‘scary’ or ‘formal’ dentist office visits. “My office is more inviting to people who walk by and for those who tend to put their oral health at the bottom of their priority lists,” he explained.

At the end of the day, Dr. Cho said he will always strive to look for ways to improve and grow so that he can better serve his patients’ needs.

Ali Albeer, DDS | Rosemeade Dental
972-446-1111 | RosemeadeDental.com

Ali Albeer, D.D.S., brings a wealth of knowledge to his solo practice at Rosemeade Dental on Old Denton Road in Carrollton. Having graduated in the top five percent of his class, teaching dentistry at a university level while starting his first private practice, and earning a master’s in prosthodontics – all in his home country of Iraq – Dr. Albeer has always been quite the achiever.

In 2005, Dr. Albeer, his wife, and their baby daughter had to flee their war-ravaged Iraq for Jordan, where he opened another private dental practice. He eventually moved to the states and later graduated second in his class at the University of Colorado School of Dental Medicine, where he garnered a number of awards, including the Excellence in Prosthodontics Award.

For Dr. Albeer, who has about 18 years of dental experience under his belt, awards and scholastic achievement are great, but they aren’t everything. His kind and gentle approach, his desire to make every patient feel comfortable and his goal of helping patients overcome their fears are what matters most. “Patient care comes first, and everything else comes later,” he said.

A patient of Dr. Albeer’s who recently underwent a root canal, said, “He is very personable and gentle. He took the time and addressed everything before we did anything. I was very nervous, but he was calm and patient. I personally love that he did a follow up phone call himself to see how I was doing.”

When asked about making personal follow-up phone calls to his patients, Dr. Albeer shrugged his shoulders and said matter-of-factly, “I care about my patients. I treat them as family.”

Hiren Patel, DDS | Park Row Dental
817-801-9500 | ParkRowDental.com

Hiren Patel, D.D.S., started his private practice, Park Row Dental (1930 E. Park Row Drive), in Arlington in June 2014. In high school in India, his favorite subject was biology, and he knew he wanted to pursue dentistry, which was a highly competitive field to get into. But that didn’t stop him. “I like challenges as I believe they will make you stronger and better than you are,” he said. “Also, my dad always wanted one of his sons to be a dentist, so I said, ‘Well, why not me!’”

Dr. Patel is modest when it comes to comparing himself to other dentists, but one thing he feels he can definitely offer is patient satisfaction. “My staff and I will do everything to the best of our abilities to make sure that each patient is satisfied,” he said. “I like to put myself in my patients’ shoes. I will explain everything to the patient, as if it were for me.”

If a patient needs special care or treatment that is outside the scope of Dr. Patel’s abilities, he has no problem referring him/her to a trusted specialist. This is another aspect that sets private practice dentistry above corporate. “Corporate says, ‘It’s a simple procedure, do it.’ But each patient is unique and sometimes it’s better to have them see someone else,” Dr. Patel said.

With Dr. Patel, it’s not about money or quotas; it’s about what is best for each patient.

With the abundance of choices for a dentist in Texas, doctor driven practices are the ones that have patients travel over two hours to come in to one of these offices. If you’re looking for a dentist who works with patient-oriented teams in an inviting and comfortable office with state-of-the-art technology and even offers a guarantee on dental work, look no further than Revive, Rosemeade and Park Row Dental. They look forward to perfecting your smile.
