The O'Connor Tract Co-Operative Water Company no longer has levels of manganese above the secondary drinking water standard.

Our water system is no longer in violation of any secondary drinking water standard.

Since January 25th, 2024, the manganese treatment plant has been operating under a commissioning phase, and manganese test results from the treatment plant have been below the State's secondary standard for manganese, meaning that the water supplied meets the regulation.

Per State requirements, the Company has flushed all the water distribution lines, and performed tests throughout the distribution system. After flushing was completed, the testing results were below the secondary standard for manganese.

Please share this information with others who drink this water, especially those who may not have received this public notice directly (for example, people in apartments, nursing homes, schools, and businesses).
