Hello St. Mark's Lutheran,

Here we are deep into September and the air has begun to chill a bit already. Football is in full swing. Jackets and sweaters that had been tucked away are finding their way back out. Evenings that not long ago were perfect for ice cream now sometimes call for a mug of tea or hot cocoa instead. Autumn is upon us!

It's the season of apple orchards and hayrides, of pumpkin patches and Friday night football games, of raking leaves into piles only to watch the kids (or grandkids!) jump into them with delight. What is your favorite family fall activity? Maybe it's a trip to the orchard for cider and donuts, maybe it's an afternoon drive to see the leaves, maybe it's sitting by a fire on a crisp evening. However you enjoy the season, autumn invites us to pause, give thanks, and remember the One who blesses us with such abundance.

For me, one of my favorite traditions is visiting the local apple orchards. There's something about stepping out into that crisp air, catching the sweet scent of apples all around, and walking row by row through the trees. I love picking out a few beauties to take home—and I'll admit, I don't mind the apple cider donuts either! Those little moments remind me that God's blessings are not just big and lofty, but earthy, tangible, and close at hand.

Scripture reminds us: "The earth has yielded its increase; God, our God, has blessed us" (Psalm 67:6). Autumn is a visible reminder of that truth. The fields yield their harvest, the trees share their fruit, and the earth itself proclaims God's generosity. In the same way, we are called to yield blessings in our lives—to share love, kindness, forgiveness, and generosity with those around us. God entrusts us with gifts not only to hold onto, but to pass along.

On Sunday, September 28th, both Faith and St. Mark's will join in blessing the quilts—a beautiful reminder of how the love and labor of our hands can be stitched into something that warms, comforts, and blesses others near and far. That same day, we will also be supporting the CROP Walk, walking with our community to raise awareness and funds to fight hunger locally and globally. It is good to remember that while the earth yields its harvest, there are still many who go without. Through these ministries, we are able to embody God's love in action and share from the abundance God has first given to us.

This is also a wonderful season to renew our daily walk with God. We have daily devotion books available at the church—simple, accessible ways to bring Scripture and prayer into your routine. Even five quiet minutes in the morning or evening can reframe the whole day, giving peace, grounding, and a sense of God's presence. If you haven't picked up a devotion book yet, please do. Use it with your morning coffee, or keep it by your bedside. Let God's Word be the rhythm that carries you through this beautiful season.

Autumn is indeed a beautiful time to experience God's blessings in the world around us, but perhaps the greatest blessings and changes of the season are not in the leaves or the fields, but in us—hearts renewed, faith deepened, and lives opened more fully to the presence of Jesus.

May your fall days be filled with the crisp air of God's Spirit, the color of God's creativity, and the warmth of God's love.

Peace and blessings to you and yours,

Pastor Scott

The following pages are written by Bill Hare and Brad Long about their Honduras Missions.

Dear St. Mark's Lutheran Church,

We are very grateful for the donation you sent to help us get food to those in need in Honduras. Brad Long has made 2 trips to Honduras this summer in order to make the food mission happen. He sent journal entries during the beginning of his second trip and he summarized the whole trip after he was back in the US. We wanted to share his notes with you so you could see what you helped to accomplish. This year we worked with another mission group and there is still 30,000 pounds of food left to be moved out of a warehouse, repackaged into family bags and delivered to those in remote places who need it most. We are continuing to seek donations to finish this huge project.

"After arriving in Honduras and traveling a bit, I was welcomed into Angel's house. I was embraced by Angel, his wife, his two children, his brother, and our hostess, his mother-in-law, Mrs. Chila and her three dogs. They showed me my living quarters, which was a bed right beside the food packages that had already been repacked for delivery to the villages. My bed was placed on top of four bricks that jacked the bed about ten to twelve inches above the ground level dirt floor which became a river when it rained due to the brittleness of the rusted roof sheets that had seen better days. In order to be able to hop in bed, I had to place a folded box on the floor so that I was able to remove my shoes and not touch my feet on the cold moist surface of the floor.

The next thing I found difficult to adapt to was visiting the bathroom (latrine) after the protocol of trying not to get my feet muddy beside my bed. Now, let me tell you how different the bathroom situation is for Angel and his family. The bathroom is not located inside house. The latrine is located beside a water reservoir called a pila. I thank God that at least they have a basic rudimentary toilet bowl which has to be flushed with a bucket of water. Instead of a door, the latrine had an embroidered velvet curtain held by three clothesline hooks. The wind outside made that curtain fly back and forth in such a violent way that privacy seemed like a utopia under those conditions. I had to continually cough so that everyone would know that I was sitting on the throne in order to avoid an embarrassing encounter with anyone in the household. Thank God for toilet paper, which is not used by everyone in Honduras. We brought our own, but the family always guarded it like a premium commodity and brought it back into the house after each use or a passerby might steal it.

The next challenge I faced was the shower situation. We were up in the mountains and it was 50 degrees outside. I normally take a bucket shower bath, but given the extreme conditions, grandma always provided me with a boiling tea kettle to warm the water in the bucket. The curtain conditions were worse and the curtain was flying around while I was showering, needless to say I lost all my dignity while showering with a dipper bowl. After showering, the board on top of the water reservoir was replaced because that area serves many purposes. They do their dishes, wash their vegetables and fruit, do the laundry and wash their hands in the very same place. They did all my laundry there as part of the paid service that they provided. Our laundry was then taken to the kitchen and hung on a clothesline on top of the wood cooking stove to dry in the corner of the kitchen, otherwise the cold weather would be an impediment for it to dry.

The house where I stayed has one light bulb. There is no insulation, there are open ceilings made from old termite consumed pine tree timber that remains in position by God's grace. There are no modern appliances of any kind. There is no refrigerator, washing machine, dryer, dish washer or modern stove. Everything is cooked on an adobe stove with firewood and the cover of an old fifty-five oil drum is the cooking surface. We spent many nights close to that old stove to stay warm while the family gave me coffee, dinner and they shared old anecdotes of grandpa who recently passed away. Many times we ate in the darkness of the kitchen due to the daily blackouts. Every morning Angel, his brother or his son used a rusty axe to chop wood to feed the stove so that it would remain hot on a constant basis. One night I gave the family three flashlights because they used the splinters of wood as torches. I also observed that their son was doing his high school homework by candlelight every night because he is studying to become an electrician. His parents monitor every assignment and report card, because they didn't get a chance to go to school and they want their children not to go through the harsh living conditions that can result from illiteracy. Our hosts fed us mostly beans, eggs and vegetables because there is no meat due to the lack of refrigeration. The food was delicious and well cooked. There is no waste whatsoever, they ration their food because it is my feeling that they don't know what they will eat the next day. Grandma sells $14 of tortillas every other day in order to buy basic food items for the family. Otherwise, they wouldn't have any income because there are no jobs available for Angel and his wife. Angel is very appreciative for the opportunity to rent (which is a barter of eight days of hard work during the planting season for the owner of the land) some land (less than a half an acre) to be able to harvest the corn that grandma uses for the tortillas she sells. Even in the darkness of their house, they have fellowship, they talk, they listen, they laugh and they are not distracted nor absorbed by technological gadgets and all they have is their anecdotes, life experience stories and dreams for a better future for their children and their family. They dream to improve their living conditions at home and even though they never expressed it, they all wish for an opportunity to improve their quality of life.

We traveled from their house, which we used as our hub, to deliver food rations to at least 12 other villages that were in dire need of food support. Travel was rugged and rough. It felt like driving across a cornfield downhill most of the time. At one location, people that received the food rations waited at least three hours due to us being delayed because driving conditions were so harsh. Sometimes we had to be escorted to the cross roads by local leaders because the people came down from their mountain sides to the paths so that they would be all reunited to receive the food donations. It was very common to hear that they were extremely appreciative of these food rations. One lady expressed that this food came right on time and she would be able to light her stove that evening because she had nothing left in her kitchen.

Let me describe what happened as we pulled up to each distribution site. First the community leader and Angel would organize the community in priority from elders, to nursing mothers, to family recipients. Then I would share Bill and Betty's message of solidarity and love on behalf of the donors sharing God's love for Honduras. Then Ana, who is a preacher and Hernie's wife, would open in prayer, giving thanks to the Lord for the opportunity of sharing God's bounty where it is most needed. Giving Him honor and glory that only He deserves. And each person that received a food package also received God's blessing. We had long days traveling, organizing, distributing and heading to different villages every single day under harsh conditions, many times without the proper rain gear. We had no jackets and the temperatures were about forty degrees at night. We could literally see our steam from our body heat abandon our shivering skin with the reflection of the truck's headlights. This made us eventually sick with unexpected colds that forced us to get intramuscular injections to improve our health before going to the next stage of distribution.

As of today, we are now ready to reload after distributing 1,547 food rations. We are currently waiting for some containers to be unloaded at the hubs so that we may haul the food rations to the communities down south where our ministry has been working for 2 decades. I have to share with you that this has been the biggest food security program that I have participated in with Bill, Betty, Beth, Hernie, his wife Ana, and their baby daughter, Genesis Amari Jocabed. None of this would be possible in the past, during this current mission and also in the future without the trust deposited in Bill and Betty and also without the support of the Polo Council of Churches and individual and group donors that have had an active participation in this miracle of love that the Lord has granted us to be part of."

The following 2 pages are what Brad wrote a few days after he returned home.

Food mission information:

- Our mission worked with another mission group to distribute food to those in need.
- The box truck was loaded at a warehouse and hauled 7,300 pounds of rice and cornmeal each time. 50,000 pounds was hauled for this mission.
- These loads were repackaged into family packages. This repackaging took place in 4 different homes across Honduras.
- Some of the mission work happened near the borders of Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua.
- 3,600 families received food during the two parts of our mission this month.

These are some of the thoughts from Brad Long (Polo, IL) when he returned home from Honduras. Although my dad, Bill Hare, still wishes he could return to Honduras, that is not possible any more. Brad is now his representative. Brad took a message from my dad to the people in southern Honduras that mean so much to him and Brad also brought greetings back.

"We wish to thank all who have supported this mission. Many people received food and wish to thank the supporters for not forgetting those who are in desperate need.

We traveled several hundred miles during this mission. Miles in Honduras are not the same as miles here in the US. Roads are rough, many are just dirt or mud with BIG rocks. Heavy duty vehicles are a necessity to get to the villages where we deliver food. I usually drove the Toyota Land Cruiser.

The 16 villages in southern Honduras are extremely remote and have no other outside help. Bill always said, "We go where no one else will go."

This time there were many daily police road blocks on our travels. They ran the dogs around our vehicles and asked us questions. They were looking for drugs and human traffickers, especially in the box truck.

When we arrive in the villages, the people line up to receive the food. We pray with each family representative and tell them they have many brothers and sisters that love them and pray for them. We wish God's blessings on them and tell them we pray that God may grant them daily bread.

When I enter back into the US after spending more than 30 days in Honduras over the past 2 months, I know how blessed people are and most don't know it or they take it for granted. I have often said, "there are no poor people in the US." We have clean drinking water, wells that don't run dry and power that stays on. (If people are lucky enough to have power, it was off daily and sometimes it was 24-48 hours before it was back on.) We have help from fire, police, food banks, churches and places like Goodwill and Salvation Army. We have job opportunities, access to education and government help with food, housing and health care. There is always a big adjustment period when we return from Honduras to a country that has so much when we leave people that truly have nothing and we have been fully immersed in that way of living.

I have always felt by being a blessing to someone else, you will be blessed. We could not do this mission work without each donor that supports us and each donation, no matter the size, matters to those receiving food. 100% of the money sent to Bill goes to support this work in Honduras. This mission was the biggest food delivery we have ever done and there is more food yet to be repackaged and delivered. We were able to employ several Hondurans to help with the work and that money will feed their families."

We thank you for your support,

Bill, Betty, Beth, Brad Bill Hang

Ernie, Honduran Coordinator, and his wife Anna and their baby who also travels with them
