

Roxane O. Adler Hickey

Director, William & Mary Washington Center
William & Mary

Roxane O. Adler Hickey is the Director of the William & Mary Washington Center, located in Washington, DC. Roxane joined the Center in 2006 as the first program director of the newly established D.C. Semester Program. As the Center grew, Roxane's role developed, and in 2021, she became the Director. As Center Director, Roxane is responsible for strategic vision, innovation, engagement and collaborations with campus and DC-based partners, board management, fundraising, and teaching experiential learning courses.

Roxane earned her Bachelor's degree from Bucknell University in 2000 and graduated from the W&M School of Education in 2002 with a Master of Education in Educational Policy, Planning, & Leadership with an emphasis in Higher Education Administration. She earned her Ed.D. in January 2023 from the W&M School of Education. Her dissertation was focused on experiential learning, internships, and career readiness. Roxane lives with her husband, two kids, and dog in Ashburn, VA.