

HCOP MISSION STATEMENT

The mission of the Headache Cooperative of the Pacific is to promote communication and spread headache information among headache caregivers and researchers, to provide headache education for non-headache specialists, and to increase understanding of headache in the healthcare community through:

- Advancing the science of headache through education and coordinated research
- Providing a forum to link providers of headache care throughout the western states
- Supporting access to appropriate care for our patients
- Increasing awareness about national and international organizations and journals devoted to headache research and patient care

ABOUT HCOP

The Headache Cooperative of the Pacific (HCOP) is an association of headache specialists in the western United States.

HCOP meetings are designed to be held in smaller, intimate venues where healthcare professionals with an interest in clinical and basic research aspects of headache can come together to expand their knowledge base and share experiences, observations, and ideas in a casual and creative setting.

The symposium is intended to provide basic scientists and clinicians working in headache with a forum for translational talks aimed at increasing interaction between the two groups, nourishing creative solutions in headache medicine and research. The program is unique in that it is a small venue with very high level faculty, affording participants an opportunity to interact that is often missing at larger meetings. The program is also unique in that each year a different theme within the definition of translational approaches to headache is adopted, distinguishing it from the broader over view topics of clinical meetings or the potpourri of scientific presentations seen at scientific meetings. Feedback from participants at our previous meetings along with robust enrollment each year, indicates that this is a perceived need in the headache community.
