Hello Dr. Fong,

The journey for our family, as we look back and reflect, has truly been remarkable and we credit it all to Dr. Fong's Therapy. Prior to therapy, K [REDACTED] stemmed on small objects, his attention span was short, his processing time was longer than normal and K [REDACTED] was not speaking in complete sentences. Our life was in the car, constantly going from one therapy session to another. Each of the above issues needed separate therapies.

I clearly remember the day we met Dr. Fong for K [REDACTED]'s evaluation. I always had anxiety during evaluations because you want your child to do better than expected. As Dr. Fong was working with K [REDACTED], I proceeded to help with some of the answers. I would either tell him that K [REDACTED] didn't understand a question or that he does this at home. Dr. Fong politely explained that I was not helping "Smile", that K [REDACTED] probably understands what he was saying but just does not know how to send the information to his brain. What an eye opener for me!!!! At that point, I began to just sit back and observe.

We began our weekly sessions and after the first couple of months, the transformation began. We noticed that K [REDACTED]'s attention span was starting to increase. At Dr. Fong's recommendation, we changed K [REDACTED]'s frames to sports goggles to keep him focused on what was directly in front of him, eliminating the stemming and looking over the top of his glasses. I bought sports goggles in various colors because I knew that this would be a long process or at least this is what I thought.

After a year and a half of constant therapy, we slowly started eliminating the other therapy sessions as we continued with therapy. I am so proud and happy to say that in July 2009, it will be one year since our last session and as of May 2009, K [REDACTED] has completed Kindergarten at a local public school with no aide. He still continues his speech sessions at school but he has successfully passed all tests for 1st Grade. He is also taking a Chinese language class along with playing basketball and soccer. He is just a social butterfly and very active in sports. Also, K [REDACTED] NO longer wears his sports goggles. His focus and concentration is much better and he actually told us one day that he wanted to wear his other glasses and it is now 5 months later and he continues to wear his regular glasses on a daily basis.

We understand that we must work with K [REDACTED] to help him continue to improve. Dr. Fong has given us a life that is promising and filled with fun instead of frustration. THANK YOU, Dr. Fong, we love you.
