Please, BE WATER WISE

The hidden cost of watering your lawn

Many municipal water authorities tie your sewer metering to your water meter. Instead of having a separate meter for sewage, they assume all the water that goes into your home also goes right back to the sewage treatment plant as well. So next time you water your lawn, remember that you're paying for the treatment of that water you see flowing down the gutter to the storm drain.

The good news!

The great news is that advances in plumbing fixtures, industrial processes and public awareness has had a meaningful impact on water use trends. Faucets today use less water and still provide great pressure. Toilets use less water per flush and people are more aware of the best times of day to water their lawns.

We don't have to sacrifice our quality of life to conserve water. Big savings can be had by just being more aware of our daily habits, leaving more water in our rivers & reservoirs & more money in our pockets
