About the County

Island County is located in the U.S. state of Washington. As of the 2010 census, its population was 78,506. Its county seat is Coupeville, while its largest city is Oak Harbor. Its name reflects the fact that it is composed entirely of islands. It contains two large islands, Whidbey and Camano, and seven smaller islands (Baby, Ben Ure, Deception, Kalamut, Minor, Smith, and Strawberry).

An hour's trip from downtown Seattle, Coupeville and Central Whidbey Island offer peaceful landscapes and opportunities for biking, hiking, kayaking, sailing, or just breathing in the fresh sea air and relaxing in locally owned and operated restaurants and inns. A wide variety of interests are met in exploring the Island County Historical Society Museum, Admiralty Lighthouse, Meerkerk Gardens, antique shops, art galleries, heritage farms, working studios, wineries, farmers markets, and the Coupeville Arts Center with year-round fine art classes, are but a few of the choices.

Nestled at the waters edge Oak Harbor is a vibrant community packed with activity for families of all ages. The unparalleled beauty of Deception Pass boasts expansive views and unforgettable sunsets and serves as a fitting backdrop to the myriad of outdoor adventures that await. Spot a harbor seal, stumble across a secret tide pool or discover a hidden treasure in one of the town's unique boutique or antique shops, Oak Harbor welcomes you to Come Ashore.

All of the islands offer something unique and new to explore. With nature providing a buffer from "super-city" sprawl, Whidbey and Camano Islands provide the perfect, easy-to-reach, escape.
