

Perfect Flaw

Rachael Martin 12,15,15

This message came to me a few days ago while riding in the car with my girls. Remembering that almost always, as a child, you see someone for who they are, not what they have. As a child, most of us just wanted someone to play with – and if another child had a deformity of some sort, it was most often not even a 2nd thought because a child thinks big and they have very little limitations in their wild imaginations!

When you are a child, most of the time when you see something different with someone you are quick to call attention to it, however, it's up to the parent to help that child through the thought process and make it a teachable moment and when done in the right way, that child will learn to accept people for who they are not what they look like.

The way Jesus sees each one of us is through eyes that because of salvation and forgiveness see who we are in the kingdom of God – who we were destined and created to be. He doesn't see what we literally see in the mirror when we wake up. (yikes! Thank You Jesus!)

Children come straight from the hand of God, with no filter other than heaven's beauty and it's up to us to make sure that stays a part of them to last into their adulthood.

Luke 18:16 – But Jesus called them to Him and said, “Let the little children come to Me, and do not forbid them; for of such is the kingdom of God.

I pray from this holiday season on, that we will all learn to see others through the eyes of a babe and love others the way Christ loves each of us. May you be filled with unconditional love today and always!
