

Crowd vs. Community

The crowd seeks
uniformity;
the goal of community
is unity.

The crowd absorbs
individuals;
community fosters
individuality.

The crowd imposes
unanimity;
community proposes
consensus.

The crowd demands
compliance;
community prefers
communication.

The crowd requires
conformity;
community relies on
responsibility.

The crowd is a
clique and a herd;
community wants to be
a family.

Individuals live for
the crowd;
community exists for
the individuals.

In a crowd
you feel the self
submerge;
within a community
you see yourself
emerge.

You easily get lost
in a crowd;
so, find yourself
in a community.

© Msgr. Walter Niebrzydowski
July 8, 1993
Fr-Walter@nyc.rr.com
www.epichurch.us