

Patrick Choate Ph.D. is currently Director of the Manufacturing Policy Project, which studies long-term U.S. economic policy, and has taught Advanced Issues Management at George Washington University's Graduate School of Political Management. He previously worked as Director of Research and Planning for the Oklahoma Industrial Development Commission; as Tennessee's first Commissioner of Economic and Community Development; as the Director of the Appalachian and then Southern Regional Offices of the U.S. Department of Commerce's Economic Development Administration (EDA); as Director of the EDA Office of Economic Research; as the Senior Economist in the Office of Management and Budget's Trade Reorganization Project; as a Fellow at the Battelle Institute's Academy for Contemporary Problems and as Vice President of Public Policy at TRW, Inc. Dr. Choate was a co-founder of the Congressional Economic Leadership Institute (CELI) in 1986 and served as its Chair or Co-Chair for 18 years. He also served on several Presidential and Congressional commissions on education, infrastructure and national security.

Dr. Choate serves on the Board of Directors of the Federation for American Immigration Reform (the largest and oldest immigration reform organization in the U.S.) and of the American Innovators for Patent Reform.

Dr. Choate co-hosted the radio talk show "For The People" with Chuck Harder. He hosted a weekly radio show called The Week Ahead from 1994 to 1996 and the Pat Choate Show from 1997 to 2000. He is the author of more than 200 articles, monographs, professional papers, reports and books on U.S. competitiveness, trade, education, training, technology, politics, and public policy.

Patrick Choate is, perhaps, most known for being the 1996 Reform Party Vice President candidate and the running-mate of H. Ross Perot.
