

"I love my profession. It took many years of training to get where I am, and I'm thankful for each step I took because plastic surgery is exactly where I want to be. I am dedicated to helping my patients get what they want — a more youthful and more beautiful appearance. But my job doesn't stop there. As important as an excellent result is the experience a patient has from the moment they step into my office, throughout their treatments and procedures and follow-up visits. Surgery of any kind is a vulnerable time for a person. I feel deeply that the experiences we have in whatever we do stay with us a lifetime. I strive to make certain the experiences a patient has while in my care are positive. It's how I want to be treated."
