

Yesterday, Today, & Forever

Rachael Martin 12,20,2017

To those of you who shared with us in celebrating Hanukkah, we'd like to extend a warm thank you and hope that you experience the Lords presence in remembering God's miracles of old and in continuing to believe that He still performs miracles today.

I see it so many things, from His provision, to His timing, to His reminding me that He is moving in my children's life and in my whole family. With the help of Facetime, we were able to celebrate with my sister and her children each night of Hanukkah and even though my mom had surgery right before, we somehow pulled it together and it worked! By the way, my mom is doing well in her recovery. Thanks for all of those who are continuing to pray!

My sister one day told me in a text that the candles the night before had just gone out on their own in order in which they were lit... How incredible is that? I asked her to share it with our social world, and hopefully one day she will. Those candles could have gone out any old way – the heat could have kicked on and the air from the vent blown one out..... someone could have walked by and created a breeze, anything... but she said as she was watching it before bed – she saw them going out in order...

Friends, we may not always see God, we may not always feel Him, but we KNOW that He is there – as He was for the Jews in times of need – He still Is today, He is the same – yesterday, today and forever – and NOTHING changes Him. What He says He will do and His promises NEVER fail.

We pray that His light continues to shine in each of us and that as we meditate on His Word, that He will be a lamp to our feet and a Light to our path, this season and always.

Many blessings!
