THE NEEDS OF A RETIRED ATHLETE

Greyhounds are a breed with a life expectancy of 10 years or more. Are you prepared for a commitment to a dog for the remainder of its life? _____

Do you have the financial resources to meet the medical needs of a large dog, including good quality food, heartworm preventative, vet care, and flea medications, as needed? _____

Greyhounds are sighthounds, which means their eyesight is highly developed. They are also friendly and curious, as well as filled with the desire to run whenever given the chance. A greyhound, therefore, can never be trusted off-leash unless in a secure, fenced area. A loose greyhound is usually a dead greyhound. Do you understand this requirement and agree to keep your dog safe by always leashing it unless in a securely fenced area? _____

If you have young children, have you considered how you will prevent them (and their young friends) from accidentally opening doors and/or gates that would allow your greyhound to escape? _____

Tell us what provisions you have, or intend to make, to keep everyone safe. _____

Heartworm is very deadly and common in this part of the country. Are you willing to keep your greyhound on preventative all year, as recommended by your veterinarian? _____

Greyhounds are not a breed suited to living outside. For many reasons, a retired greyhound needs (and wants) to live inside with its new family. They certainly enjoy time outside, but long periods alone, unsupervised, invite a whole host of problems.

Do you understand this requirement and agree that your greyhound will be an inside member of your family? _____

Greyhounds fresh from the track sometimes feel the need for the security of a training crate. We advocate the use of these crates when it appears the greyhound needs it, in order to learn the rules of home life and remain safe when unsupervised. Remaining comfortable with being in a crate is also helpful in the case of vet trips, boarding kennels, illness or injury, etc. Are you willing to buy and learn to use a crate to help your dog adjust if it seems to be required? _____
