

During the FEES, the scope goes up one side of your nose and stays near the back of your tongue while you are eating and drinking. The scope is like a tiny flashlight (as thin as a piece of cooked spaghetti) shining into your throat, and we can see everything below the light including your windpipe (trachea) and voice box (larynx).