

Hospitality vs. Hostility

If your stance towards life is confrontational,
you will be embroiled in
hostility.

If, instead, your attitude
is relational,
you will engage in hospitality.

Hostility fears
and excludes;
hospitality loves
and includes.

Hostility shuns
and avoids;
hospitality connects
and embraces.

Hostility shuts down
and locks up;
hospitality opens up
and sits down.

The doors of hostility
are a barricade;
the portals of hospitality
are an entrance.

The house of hostility
is a fortress;
the abode of hospitality
is a home.

Hostility treats others
as intruders;
hospitality welcomes them
as guests.

Hostility communicates
by threats;
hospitality sends out
invitations.

Hostility breeds violence and leads to
loneliness;
hospitality fosters amity
and results in solidarity

Hostile,
you increase
strife;
hospitable,
you enrich
life.

Why contribute to
adversity
by pursuing
hostility,
when you can foster
harmony
by practicing
hospitality?

© Msgr. Walter Niebrzydowski
September 17, 2000
Fr-Walter@nyc.rr.com
www.fatherwaltersparish.org