DÍA DE LOS MUER+OS - pay of the pead -

Imagine that once a year heaven's gate opens up to reunite the spirits of the deceased with those of the living. Día de los Muertos is a Mexican celebration which scholars believe originated with the Aztecs more than 3,000 years ago and allows for the spirits to reconnect with the living. This wonderful holiday is joyful, colorful and is meant to celebrate and honor people who have died. November 1st is dedicated to the children and November 2nd is for the adults. This holiday is now embraced by people all around the world. Traditionally, the view on death is not considered the end of life but rather a continuation of life. Not fearing death, the Mexican culture embraces death, mocks it, dances with it and humors it. Only through symbolism in the rituals and rites that take place during the Day of the Dead celebrations, one can experience the meaning of the significance of life as a dream and only in death is one truly awake.

- The Altar -

During the Day of the Dead, altars are erected to welcome and honor the spirit of the deceased. The amount of tiers on an altar vary but usually average three tiers and a photograph of the person to whom it is dedicated is placed as the focal point of what can be an elaborate display honoring the departed life. Objects are also placed on the altar to signify the four elements: water, wind, fire, and earth. Water is given to guench the spirit's thirst from their long journey and is usually put in a clay pitcher or glass. Wind is represented by the papel picado, perforated paper, which is used to decorate the altar. Fire is represented by candles and are placed throughout. The earth element is represented by food, usually pan de muerto (bread of the dead). Other food and drinks are left on the altar like mole (sauce with many spices and herbs), fruit, chocolate, atole (corn-based drink), and whatever the deceased person liked such as tequila. Calaveras de azúcar, sugar skulls, are very important on the altar as they are a delightful treat to the traveling spirit and those of the living. A towel, soap and a small bowl are also added so the spirits can wash their hands after their long journey. To decorate and add a fragrance, cempasuchil (marigold flowers) and copal (resin incense) are placed on the altar. For the children, their favorite toys and games are essential to the altar to entertain the spirit of the child. Anything else that will honor the person and send them on their journey back to heaven can be added to their altar - a favorite book, a comb, a letter or a rosary. It is believed a pleased departed spirit will help please the spirits of those of the living.

La Catrina began as a brainstorm of ideas and iconography related to the Day of the Dead. I wanted the piece to embody the event, hence the incorporation of two popular symbols: the skeleton lady, La Calavera Catrina, and marigolds. After creating thumbnail sketches and color concepts, I proceeded to taking reference photos. I dressed up as Catrina (complete with roses and a makeshift dress) and modeled for a series of photos. My original design metamorphosed over time, taking on the postural sensibilities of Alphonse Mucha, an artist well known for his Art Nouveau style. The circular emblem behind Catrina's head became a Mayan calendar, adding a layer of meaning to the celebration's cultural history. The painting was rendered in gouache paint, an opaque watercolor medium. Catrina's undead, yet alowing countenance is the product of persistent painting, study and patience." - Kelsey Broersma, artist.

"La Catrina has become the referential image of death in Mexico. It is common to see her embodied as part of the celebrations of Day of the Dead throughout the country; she has become a motive for the creation of handcrafts made from clay or other materials, her representations may vary, as well as the hat." – J.G. Posada, artist & originator of La Catrina.
