Once again, Chicago has provided a cautionary tale in gun control. This time the city helped to illustrate the futility of gun turn-ins – sometimes incorrectly termed “buybacks” by those under the misimpression that all property originates from government.

On April 4, the Chicago Sun Times published an item titled, “‘Where is the Glock?’ Gun turned over to Chicago police wound up in the hands of a teenager.” The piece opened by describing a December 2023 gun turn-in held at the St. Sabina Church in Chicago’s Southside. The piece noted:

A 1994 study that appeared in Public Health Reports noted changes in firearm related crimes following a turn-in campaign in Seattle “were not statistically significant.” In a 1996 article published by the Police Executive Research Forum, Florida State University criminologist Gary Kleck made clear, “Existing empirical information provides no basis for believing that gun buy-back programs reduce violence of any kind.”

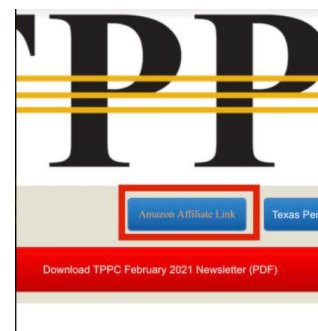

For three decades researchers from across the gun control political divide have understood the inefficacy of firearm turn-ins. With some statistical and anecdotal evidence that these turn-ins may even be counterproductive, the time has come to end these foolish schemes.

NRA Armed Citizen from May 2025 Magazine

On the morning of Feb. 13, a woman was driving with her window down in Houston, Texas, when she noticed another vehicle being driven erratically. The woman attempted to pass that vehicle, but the two collided (fault in the wreck was not reported). The erratic driver left his vehicle, allegedly strangling her through the window. Fortunately, the woman was able to fire a shot at the man ending the attack. The man was taken into custody and security videos corroborate the woman's account. Law-enforcement officials urged drivers to remain calm and not make eye contact when road rage is a factor, but noted "you do have to defend yourself" in case of imminent threat.

Trump Admin Moves to Open New Lands for Hunting

(Click the above link to read the full article)

U.S. Secretary of the Interior Doug Burgum last week announced the expansion of hunting and fishing at over 42 wildlife refuges and hatcheries nationwide.

The announcement, which comes just in time for hunting season, includes new opportunities for sportsmen, opening 87,000 acres of public land managed by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. Burgum's office said the move, which is more than double the acreage that was opened by the Biden Administration, is a win for all sides.

"By opening more areas to hunting and outdoor recreation, we're helping drive tourism, create jobs, and generate revenue for local communities, all while promoting responsible stewardship of our natural resources," said Burgum, the former pro-gun Republican governor of North Dakota.

Trump's FY26 Budget Slashes ATF Funding, Defends 2nd Amendment from Bureaucratic Overreach

Ammoland Inc. Posted on May 8, 2025, by F Riehl, Editor in Chief

In a bold move that gun owners across the nation will say has been long overdue, President Trump's FY2026 budget proposal delivers a massive $468 million cut to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives (ATF), signaling a dramatic course correction for the agency long accused of overstepping its authority.

The White House did not mince words. "The Budget bolsters the Second Amendment by cutting funding for ATF offices that have criminalized law-abiding gun ownership through regulatory fiat," the budget document states.

Rather than empowering more anti-gun red tape, the Trump budget proposes a return to the ATF's core law enforcement mission: stopping illegal firearms traffickers and assisting local law enforcement in tracing crime guns—particularly those used by gangs like MS-13. In short, it means going after the criminals, not the Constitution.
