

backer called Luke "the greatest fighting pilot in the war."

It was only after the armistice that the fate of Frank Luke was learned. A graves registration officer discovered in the village of Murvaux the grave of an American flyer - early twenties, blond hair, heavy build, medium height. The villagers reported that he had been shot down on September 29th after destroying three balloons and two Fokkers. His plane hopelessly crippled from counterfire, he maneuvered it over a German trench and opened fire with his machine gun, killing eleven soldiers and wounding many others. After crash-landing, he fought on. With German riflemen closing in, he pulled out his pistol and held them off until he died of his wounds.

Among other winners of the Medal of Honor was Lt. Col. William S. "Wild Bill" Donovan for action at Landres-et-St.-Georges, France. He first came onto the military scene as a U.S. cavalryman down on the Mexican border in 1916. The cavalry was then chasing Pancho Villa after he had crossed the border and raided the town of Columbus, N.M. Looking ahead to World War II, Donovan as a major-general would set up the first U.S. intelligence service when he established and headed the Office of Strategic Services (OSS), the forerunner to today's Central Intelligence Agency (CIA).

The cases cited are only a few of the 124 Medals of Honor awarded for World War I service. As a relief from war, the next chapter of the story will deal with the Medal of Honor in peace time.

"The American Expeditionary Force of 1917-18 was a jolly, singing army compared with the grim, tight-lipped American Army of 1942-45. Music and banners were not wanting; New York's tin-pan alley ground out some excellent marching songs such as Irving Berlin's 'Oh, How I Hate to Get up in the Morning!' Official propaganda aimed to make the AEF feel like knights errant rescuing damsel France from the wicked Hun; 'Mademoiselle From Armentieres' and her sisters worked hard to make it worth their while. 'We cried more over the Americans leaving for the front than over our own men,' said a French peasant woman at a village near the front lines - 'They were so young and looked so innocent, and were so far from home.' The 'doughboys' learned tactics of trench warfare surprisingly quickly; his elan, fighting spirit, and contempt for death made a deep impression on allies as well as enemies. He was far better taken care of than in earlier wars; better medicine, sanitation, field and base hospitals (but, as yet, no wonder drugs to check infection from wounds); YMCA, Red Cross, and Salvation Army; long leaves in Paris, with guided tours. And he was the better fighter because he wanted desperately to get it 'over, over there' and go home."

In the next issue of "Footprints," we will be printing several genealogies. On my last trip to Salem, I gathered up a number of family histories from the archives and will put together genealogical outlines from the information contained therein.
