The Colombian Superstar Opens Up About Success and Family

Raising multicultural children and her parenting style: "In Spain, parents speak to their children as equals, and I feel children respond in turn. But in all three cultures, parents are attentive to their children. Their dad, soccer star Gerard Piqué and I grew up in very close-knit families, and that has made us openly affectionate parents."

Which language her son is picking up faster: I would say Spanish, since I'm the one he spends the most time with and it's my first language. I talk to him as much as possible... it serves as bonding time and helps his language-comprehension skills.

Her family's playlist at home: "We listen to Frank Sinatra, Billie Holiday, Green Day, Pearl Jam, Carlos Vives, old-school salsa - something for every mood. Milan loves songs with a lot of percussion; I think babies are naturally drawn to those kinds of rhythms."

On how being a mom helped her learn how to delegate:

"Becoming a mom forced me to prioritize and make room for the things that are most important, while recognizing there are things I can let go of and the world won't crumble around me."
