

Don't Chase the Wind

Rachael Martin 6,14,2018

In considering what to write about today, I've been catching up on my devotions and one stuck out that I felt would coincide with the direction that Gina and I are feeling to take with the GAHF website.

We didn't sign up to do this website together 5 years ago plus in order to have something to do. Quite the contrary, we were (and still are) all busy (everyone who has helped us with the website included) and we know that God's path for each of us changes and we wanted to serve the Lord together and apart and still be able to do daily life as the Lord lead.

There have been a lot of changes since the beginning of GAHF and I believe this website has played a critical role in keeping us unified and dare I say sensitive to what the Lord is doing in each others lives and in our personal lives. As well, we have all been so busy at times, that we have wondered if the website should take another direction. Alas here we are and as we seek the Lord for the next year and how we can bless Him, our readers, and our families, we never want to find ourselves "chasing the wind" just to fill time.

As Gina (and Ecclesiastes) says, there is a time for everything and in one of my devotions it states the following:

"We feel the wind as it passes, but we can't catch hold of it or keep it. In all our accomplishments, even the big ones, our good feelings are only temporary. Security and self-worth are not found in the accomplishments but far beyond them in the love of God. Think about what you consider worthwhile in your life-where you place your time, energy, and money. Will you one day look back and decide that you were chasing the wind?"

We love each and every one of you and this is why we reach out on GAHF. We want to continue to be a blessing and use this opportunity while we still have freedom of speech to connect and share as much as possible. We also want to be sensitive to change and allow Holy Spirit to breathe on this website and each of you as only He can and as we walk through this GAHF journey and we make changes as we feel led, we say to each of you – join us! We are only here because of Him and because of you all. <3
