

Log House Building In The Bush

Preliminary to the whole, the author dismounts from his high horse to plead with the reader to forebear.

He is a late bloomer; sometimes late bloomers put forth weird flowerings, not seen before.

While it is his intent to be seen as a more normal occurrence, he is uncertain, even if he was normal, how he would be perceived, in any case.

His wife, Charline, to whom this work is dedicated, urges him not to apologize. That was a non-specific recommendation, whether it applies to this work is open to question.

The work proceeds with an Introductory regarding Beginnings. Then is divided into Five Parts, the first four involving the building, and/or, doing in the bush. The Fifth Part is intended as a follow up after a period of time. This is an open ended Part that will be able to receive added material as the author sees fit, over time.
