Icing Over in Communal Amana

It makes sense to me that Amana is home to Amana brand freezers and refrigerators, as they broke their backs every winter in communal Amana (1855-1932) cutting and hauling ice.

The imperative to cut ice was so strong that they went to great lengths to do it. The alternative being no fresh meat and eating only sausage or cured meat all summer. So they cut ice on the Iowa River. The Lily Lake could be used but sometimes the growth of lilies and water plants was so thick it impeded the cutting. The river was the best alternative. In West Amana they liked a deep, Iowa River oxbow that was called "Watts Pond," for the pioneer who once lived next to it. Remember you couldn't use a too shallow pool or pond as you needed some water depth for thicker blocks and water beneath the ice so that you could saw out the blocks.

For Homestead where the haul to and from the river was appalling they built their ice pond in low spot in the forest southwest of the village where a spring fed stream could be dammed and coaxed to form a wide, deep pool. This was done about 1925 by the Homestead men as one of the first acts of the Homestead Welfare Club.

You needed to wait until you had had many days of below freezing temperatures and at least a week or so of below 10 degree temperatures for good thick ice – especially as the river needed really cold weather to make it safe to work on. Early February generally presented itself as the best time but the goal was to pick a week and get through as much as possible without a blizzard, an ice storm or a deep thaw. It was a tricky business.

Accounts vary but it usually took about two weeks of flat out work, with all able bodied men and older boys helping, to harvest enough block ice to fill up the big ice houses. These were smaller than barns, but much larger than woodsheds, and were built of unpainted rough sawn lumber with wide double doors so that wagons could be moved in and out. A high beam was rigged with block and tackle aloft to remove blocks of ice from wagons. Once the ice harvest was done the wide doors were shut and sawdust piled against them. Blocks were carried out by hand through a small side door to keep the cold inside the house. The butcher shops, the general stores and the kitchen houses received regular deliveries of block ice for their ice boxes and meat coolers.

I can't think of an ice house that's still standing today though perhaps someone knows of one.

Built of lumber - double-walled - sawdust was poured into the space between the walls. I believe it was Leroy Graesser who told me that the walls had nearly a foot of space between them so the quantity of sawdust they needed was enormous. Yet more sawdust was piled on top and around the stacks of block ice to insulate it. Indeed this worked so well ice could be kept through summer into fall. In December the ice house was readied for the next ice harvest. Muddy, clumped sawdust was removed and piles of fresh sawdust brought in from the saw-mills ready to use when needed.

Usually the "ökonomiebaas" (farm manager) determined the day the ice harvest was to begin. My Opa Harry Zuber loved the ice harvest when he was a kid because it was a wonderful excuse for a 12-year-old to get out of school for two weeks and it made for a change with lots of thrilling activity involving horses and wagons, but by the 1920's when he was an adult he was not so enthralled.

Indeed it was hard work in the cold. They wore their thickest gloves, but wet ice would have rendered them worthless. The temps and wind must have been relentless. Remember these men still had to milk cows, tend cattle and pigs and do all their daily chores as well as cut ice.

Looking at photos of the ice harvest taken during Amana's communal period it appears they had a team of men on the ice to cut the blocks with long serrated blades. Think of our log-sawing games, but with one man drawing the wooden handle, up and dow with vigor, and the other end going down at any angle, sawing into the ice. The blocks were floated and pulled along with ice hooks and iron tongs to the edge of the water and then hoisted, by way of metal slide and chains, into the back of the wagon.

In one memorable photo there were about 20 men working, about 6 wagons and six teams of draft horses. Of course another group of men would have been working at the ice house to receive the blocks, stack them and shovel sawdust.

The only highlight was lunch on the ice – and by lunch they meant the mid-morning and mid-afternoon coffee breaks. Someone was assigned the duty (usually the oldest guy or the one with the worst back) making two big fires, grating down one to burn to hot coals and then set about making huge steaming kettles of coffee and frying thick slices of Schwartenmagen ("headcheese" sausage) in iron skilletes on the coals. Everyone stood around the second fire keeping warm as they ate.

No one worked on Sundays, of course, and no one missed church so there were breaks. It was a team effort which made it easier and there were plenty of laughs and jokes. Nonetheless minor cases of frostbite, chilblains, sore backs and sprains were common. It was hard on horses too. At least one team or if not two went back and forth across the ice hauling sleds of blocks from the edge of the water to the shore. These horses had to be fitted with nob-nailed horse shoes to give them a grip on the ice. The shoes were replaced after the ice harvest.

When the ice house was full, the harvest was done and everyone felt relieved.

In George Foersnter and his cousin and friends had the chance to build an electric refrigerator for home use, they leapt at it, creating what became the Amana Refrigeration and making Amana a household name as a result.

CALL FOR GARDENS: BRUSHES AND BLOOMS

A public garden weekend within Plein Air Amana

The Amana Arts Guild is excited to present Brushes and Blooms, a new community arts event that brings together the former Fresh Paint Plein Air and Colonies in Bloom. The full plein air event runs June 25–28, with Brushes and Blooms—the garden-focused portion—taking place Saturday and Sunday, June 27–28.

We are inviting local homeowners and gardeners who plan to open their gardens to the public on June 27–28 to participate. On Saturday, June 27, plein air artists will be painting throughout the Colonies and may request permission to paint in participating gardens during designated hours. Gardens will be open to the public on both Saturday and Sunday, whether or not artists are present.

Participation is simple:

- Gardens must be open to the public on June 27 and 28;
- Artists may paint in gardens on Saturday, June 27
- Garden hosts may choose whether they welcome artists or prefer public viewing only
- Artists work independently and respectfully

Brushes and Blooms celebrates the beauty, care, and creativity found in our local gardens—and offers visitors a chance to see art created in real time within them. Participating gardens will be recognized as part of the event and included in event materials when possible.

If you are interested in having your garden included in Brushes and Blooms, please contact the Amana Arts Guild at director@amanaartsguild.org

We hope you'll consider sharing your garden and helping art bloom across the Colonies this summer.

HISTORIC PRESERVATION GRANT PROGRAM

The Historic Preservation Grant Program will be opening the first cycle of applications for 2026. The intent of the program is to encourage and assist in funding the appropriate restoration of historic properties within the Land Use District. The best place to understand the parameters of the program is to visit the ACLUD website www.aclud.org. Click on the link "Historic Preservation Grant Program". Then click on the "Grant Program Details". You will see that the program is split into two "cycles" per year. The deadline to turn in your grant application and corresponding permit application for the upcoming review cycle is March 1, 2026.
