Henry has always been proud to offer over a dozen different rifles that honor some of America's hardest working men and women.

Their rifles include tribute editions for our military, first responders, and law enforcement.

Now, the Crime Victims Coalition, with support of Henry, is proud to be able to introduce the California Department of Corrections Tribute Edition rifle.

The Henry Golden Boy California Department of Corrections Tribute Edition recognizes the long history of the department, with imagery representing the first California State Prison, and a typical modern institution.

Tribute Edition rifles are fully functional works of art that can be carried, displayed with pride, and passed down through the generations to keep the family legacy alive.

In the year of 1850 California received its statehood, and was booming. Along with the influx of individuals seeking to enrich their lives in the gold rich state, was another group who choose to make their fortune thru illicit means. As the California jails were full, and the criminal population was growing, it was determined that a state prison was needed for some of the more harden criminals. In 1851 the California Senate and Assembly passed an act for securing the State Prison Convicts. In December of 1851, twenty state prisoners were placed into the hold of the Waban, and it was towed, and anchored near the quarry site where the prisoners could be taken ashore for the building of San Quentin Prison. It wasn't until the summer of 1853 when the foundation of the first cellblock was laid at San Quentin.

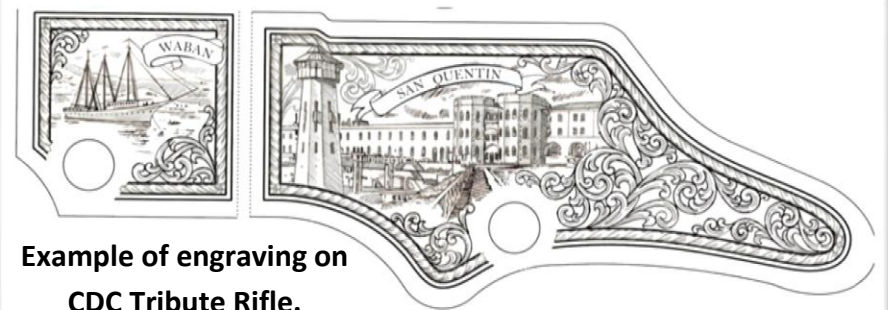

Over the next ten years San Quentin, grew in population, living conditions deteriorated, and escapes were common. As a result a committee was created and reforms were ordered. Of importance was the replacement of the war surplus muskets that worked poorly in the San Francisco damp air, with fifteen Henry repeating rifles. It was determined that one guard armed with a Henry was equal to at least ten guards with muskets. It was this simple change that quickly turned around the safety and security of the prison system, and prisoners soon learned that a well trained guard, armed with the proper equipment was a major deterrent to any escape.

The significance of the early history of the Henry Rifle, and the California Department of Corrections makes this tribute edition special, not only does the design represent the Department of Corrections over the years; the gun itself is significant in the rich history of those who have worked the line.

This tribute edition's left side carries an image of the Waban that was used during the building of the First State Prison, San Quentin. In addition, an early image of San Quentin, all in 24K gold relief against a background of classic floral engraving.

On the right side carries a representation of a modern day prison tower, with banner bearing the words IN TRIBUTE TO THOSE WHO WORKED THE LINE. All images, and the laurel leaf borders that surround them, are selectively plated with 24K gold

The recognition HONOR COURAGE DUTY is cut into the surface between the front and rear panels; the full-color California Department of Corrections badge is laser-etched and hand painted on the stock's right side.
