

Unraveling Grief

A time to release strands of sorrow to the air, feel as Native Americans do when they cut off their hair in mourning and let it drift away in rivers, creeks and streams, feel a lightness on foot, as a hollow settles where grief has made a nest for itself.

Janet Krauss
(Bridgeport, CT)

Second Honorable Mention