

Love vs. Desire

Love and desire:
both are powerful,
but desire is force,
while love is strength.

Desire demands:

"I want."

Love demurs:

"I give."

Desire pursues:

"I want more."

Love continues:

"I live for."

Desire cries:

"I want it all."

Love replies:

"All I want is you."

Desire whines

and craves;

love combines

and creates.

Desire piles up possessions
and power;

love nurtures persons
and possibilities.

Desire feeds attachment
and leads to frustration;
love fosters detachment
and brings to fruition.

Desire looks out

for me;

love gazes

at us.

Desire may bridge

a chasm;

love can fill

an abyss.

Desire can be excessive;

there is never too much love.

Love, therefore, is the best kind

of desire;

but desire can be

a false kind of love.

© Msgr. Walter Niebrzydowski

September 23, 1994

Fr-Walter@nyc.rr.com

www.fatherwaltersparish.org