Car Battery 101

How long do car batteries last?

Depending on where you live and the type of driving you do, most batteries have a three- to five-year lifespan.

How to get the most out of your car battery

A new battery will last, on average, three to five years, but driving conditions, climate and maintenance will affect its lifespan. You can get the most out of your battery by following these tips from AAA. Just remember to wear eye protection and gloves while working on your battery, and never smoke near a battery or allow it to be near sparks or an open flame.

- » Keep your battery clean. Periodically pop the hood and look for corrosion on the battery terminals. If you see any, clean it off with a small, stiff brush and a solution of baking soda and water. After removing the corrosion, rinse the battery with water.
- » Check to make sure the terminal connections aren't loose. If they are, tighten with a wrench.
- » As your battery begins to age, have it tested occasionally. Testing equipment today can often give you a good sense of how much life a battery has left. That way you can replace it when necessary and avoid being stranded.

Are all car batteries the same?

There is no one-size-fits-all battery suitable for every vehicle. When it's time for a new one, consider battery freshness, type, physical size, terminal locations, electrical specifications and warranty before you buy.

Most cars use conventional flooded lead-acid batteries, but increasing numbers of newer models with high electrical demands require an enhanced flooded battery or absorbent glass mat design. Installing the wrong type of battery can adversely affect electrical system performance and battery life.

AAA makes sure you get the right battery for your car - one that meets or beats your vehicle's original equipment manufacturer (OEM) battery specifications. This will ensure a proper fit and optimal performance.
