The Temple Political & Civil Rights Law Review invites you to its symposium on Saturday, October 20, 2007 at the Temple University James E. Beasley School of Law.

This symposium will feature keynote speaker Professor James E. Pfander from Northwestern University School of Law, as well as panels of accomplished scholars addressing the constitutional issues raised by state action to address social issues that may have once been addressed at the national level and what role the states should play in a federal system.

Symposium panels will focus on issues of federalism, same sex marriage, global warming and healthcare reform, delving more in-depth into the specific problems related to those topics as well as discuss current developments and trends in reform at the state level. Our panelists include legal practitioners, law professors, and policy experts.

The Temple Political & Civil Rights Law Review is offering six Continuing Legal Education credits, including two ethics credits, for attending the symposium.
