

In Right Out Right

Rachael Martin 7,18,2017

I know I've written about this subject before, but it came back to me just now like it was fresh and maybe I need to hear it – or one of our readers needs it – I'm just gonna flow with it!

I had an in-depth conversation with my parents today, one of those family moments, y'all know how it is, when you just have to sit at the table for a while and discuss things?!

One of the things I walked away with was obviously that we need more time praying together because I can see where prayer just works – it helps unify us and it keeps us humble. The other thing was that of the reality of life – and living each day “in right out right”. That what comes out of us needs to be helpful, and encouraging, and should make us want to reach for better. Each day can come and go so quickly that personally I can look back and be sorry that I didn't love more.

Is there a limit to how much you can love someone? I mean truly love someone! Not smothering someone with what YOU think they need. But loving each person around you where they are and letting them know – there's NOTHING they can do that will change the love you have for them because truthfully if Jesus loves me in my state.... Then... um... yeah, I can certainly love others where they are and allow the Lord to give me opportunities.

The “In Right” happens when we “Out Right”! Again – what we reap, we sow – so when we love someone – outward affection, it builds us up internally. All my life, the Lord has moved people into my path who challenge me to love – there ALL KINDS of ways to love and to show love and I don't think I can think of one person who I didn't REALLY TRULY want to love the more I pushed my tendencies aside and allowed the Lord to love through me. Funny, it works that way in my marriage too. (God is forever seeing the bigger picture!)

Folks, don't let the sun go down on your anger. Don't wait to say “I love you” – don't give the enemy a reason to bring strife and division into your relationships because the world is going to bring enough of that your way without us adding to the junk pile. Lay it aside, and love unconditionally and believe that God will give you enough love for each day. He says your cup will run over....
