Blue Springs

101 SW 15th Street
Blue Springs, MO 64015

The Dillingham-Lewis House Museum was built in 1906 and is decorated with period pieces consistent with the styles of the early 1900's.

The Chicago & Alton Depot has been restored and displays many railroad and C&A artifacts.

1108 SW Walnut
Blue Springs, MO

Hours:
Thursday 12-2pm
Saturday 11am-2pm

Grain Valley

506 Main Street Grain Valley, MO 64029

Located in the original downtown, the museum is housed in a hundred year-old building. You will see the original tin ceiling in a structure that, over the years, housed a shoe repair, grocery store, and gun shop. Exhibits include relics from Stony Point and Pink Hill, small towns that moved to Grain Valley in 1878 when the Chicago & Alton Railroad was completed to Kansas City. Learn about the early residents, the rural schools and the businesses. See artifacts from Sni-A-Bar Farms. Begun as a livestock demonstration by William Rockhill Nelson, the farm went on to exhibit the premier shorthorn herd in the nation during the early part of last century.

Hours:
Wednesday, Friday & Saturday, 10 AM-4 PM
Sunday, 1-4 PM

Lone Jack

Lone Jack Civil War Battlefield, Soldiers Cemetery and Museum

301 S Bynum
Lone Jack, MO 64070

The village of Lone Jack had been founded in the early 1830s, acquiring its name from a giant blackjack oak tree that was visible for miles across the prairie. In 1843 a new addition, known as "New Town," was established to the south of the existing settlement. By 1862 New Town consisted of two stores, a blacksmith shop, a saloon, a post office, and a few small residences. The most impressive structure was a large frame hotel known as the Cave Hotel. The Battle of Lone Jack happened on August 16, 1862, and was centered around the Cave Hotel, of which a remanent can still be seen. The soldiers were buried and remain on the battlefield in two long trenches and the Museum was opened, with the help of President Harry S. Truman, in 1963.
