FOR AN INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS-SCIENCE PARTNERSHIP FOR BRAIN HEALTH IN A BRAIN ECONOMY

One-third of the global population will develop a brain disorder yet despite the need, investments in brain research worldwide are in danger of slipping further behind with the risk that research pipelines to deliver new therapies for brain disease and disorder will dry up. Mental Health International's proposal for a business-science partnership will support the international scientific community's efforts to meet this historic global challenge, to build the case for cross-border collaboration and data sharing and to accelerate the transfer of vital brain discoveries into vital clinical benefits for everyday people.
