Bernard Broughton

Bernard completed an Arts/Law degree in 1979, worked as a research officer for AUSTCARE then undertook post-graduate work in international law in Tanzania. In 1981 he worked for a parliamentary committee on Aboriginal land rights then joined a firm of solicitors in Sydney. In 1983 Bernard gave up law to pursue development work in Africa. He initially worked for Save the Children (UK) in northern Ethiopia and Uganda and subsequently for OXFAM (UK) in Uganda and Somalia. He spent four years in Karamoja in northern Uganda. In 1989 Bernard returned to Australia to join CARE Australia as Director of Emergency Relief. In 1991 he went back overseas, working as a delegate for the International Federation of the Red Cross in Cambodia until 1993 and then as a program coordinator for OXFAM (UK) in southern Sudan until 1995. Bernard now works as a consultant based in Canberra and is a director of Project Design & Management Pty Ltd.

Jonathan Hampshire

After completing his first degree in Development Studies in 1980, Jonathan spent three years travelling in East Africa, teaching English as a foreign language in Italy and taking a Masters degree in Agricultural Economics. He was then awarded a fellowship by the Overseas Development Institute (UK) and spent the following five years working in Papua New Guinea, first as an Economist in the National Planning Office and then as the Project Manager of an integrated rural development project in Simbu province. In 1989 Jonathan joined CARE Australia as Country Programme Coordinator and in 1991 started work as a consultant and company director with Project Design & Management Pty Ltd. Jonathan has since undertaken professional assignments in over 25 countries covering Europe, Africa, Asia and the Pacific. His main professional interest currently focuses on the design and delivery of participatory short-course training for project planners and managers.
