Faith is the spark that enables. It is the ignition that moves us to action. It is the vision that allows us to see the sacred in the ordinary. This sense of reverence and sacredness is our heritage as children of the One God. But faithfulness to these ideals very often seems to take a less prominent role in today’s society and to be very much threatened in our own time. These times call for a strong, courageous witness to the sacredness of life, of creation, of human dignity. What is required is a witness to justice and peace and to our common brotherhood in the family of mankind.

Having faith means that we are in touch with God and experience God as the source of the power that enables us to live good Christian lives, marked by the ability to forgive many times as we ourselves have been forgiven by God and to cry out against the neglect of the poor and needy of our country and world, whose interests get put aside during times of war, politics and political campaigning.

In reality, faith is not something we have. It is something we practice. As Christians, what we are called to do may seem to be impossible, unreasonable, or without purpose. It might involve giving up our comfort, our health, our life or the life of someone we love, But if we trust, if we choose freely to live our faith, then we discover just how good God is, how tenderly and compassionately He will treat us. That is when we realize that we, too, can move mountains.
