RESEARCH: DATA CODING OR MANUSCRIPT DRAFTING

Kimya N. Dennis. "Being black, a woman, and childfree: The intersection of race and gender"

First known study solely conducted for childfree-by-choice people of African descent. International study with 62 respondents, 59 women and 3 men, in 6 nations: Kenya, London, Sweden, Switzerland, United States of America, Canada. Respondents expressed freedom to choose childfree life regardless of why they do not want to have children; and resources needed for physical and mental health, healthy sexuality and reproductive rights. Race and ethnicity and gender are among the demographic and cultural components discussed in the interviews—some respondents are rejected by African diaspora institutions and families.

Kimya N. Dennis. "Black males: Thoughts, beliefs, and behaviors"

Ongoing interviews and surveys of the beliefs and experiences of African diaspora men. Items include self-identity, opinions of news stories and topics, positive and/or negative experiences with law enforcement, and physical and mental health. Study currently has 21 respondents, 19 men and 2 women, all in the United States. Two women were interviewed to express their experiences with African diaspora men.

Economist Megan Regan and Kimya N. Dennis. "Racial and economic segregation: A spatial perspective of persistent, concentrated poverty"

East Winston-Salem is studied to address city planning that has centralized higher crime rates, lower income, and lower food access in East Winston. This research addresses environmental inequality that it is neither "accidental" nor "incidental" and is common in most cities in the United States.
