POSSIBLE EUCHARISTIC MIRACLE IN THE ARCHDIOCESE OF INDIANAPOLIS

While the Archdiocese has sought the expertise of a professional laboratory, it is ultimately up to the Vatican to recognize a Eucharistic miracle.

Last year, Indianapolis hosted the National Eucharistic Revival, and now they’re wondering whether a Eucharistic miracle might have occurred with a consecrated host. The Archdiocese of Indianapolis has begun an investigation into a possible Eucharistic miracle at St. Anthony of Padua Catholic Church in Morris, a small town southeast of the city.

Local 12 (news) reports on a parishioner’s claim that the Eucharist visibly took on the appearance of the physical body and blood of Christ. The claim traces back to a post from the Facebook account of Corpus Christi for Unity and Peace, in which a young woman from the parish explained that it began with an accidental dropping of the host.

After being dropped, the host was put in water to dissolve and placed in the tabernacle, only later to be joined by another host that was dropped a few hours later. The following day, when the sacristan opened the tabernacle to prepare for Saturday night Mass, there appeared to be spots of blood present. It was described as “a thin piece of skin with blood on it.”

According to the report, the Archdiocese of Indianapolis has launched an investigation to identify whether or not a Eucharistic miracle has actually occurred. In addition, it has drawn on the expert help of a professional laboratory to analyze the dissolved host and determine its physical make-up.

Father Jacob DuMont, deputy superintendent of schools for the Archdiocese of Cincinnati, told Local 12 that, while a Eucharistic miracle would be exciting, it’s too soon to tell if this is the real deal:

"We don't know for sure yet — but if eventually that does come to be, that's a great — something very special. That's a great sign that yes, Christ's living presence is here among us," Father DuMont said.

He also cautioned the faithful not to assume that a Eucharistic miracle occurred, noting that even if the lab’s findings support a miraculous circumstance, it is ultimately up to the Vatican to recognize any Eucharistic miracle.

St. Monica –
Persevering
Hope in Prayer for Loved Ones
St. Monica is a powerful example of persevering hope,

particularly for those praying for the conversion of loved ones. Born in the 4th century in North Africa, Monica's life was marked by challenges that required steadfast hope and faith. She was married to an ill-tempered pagan husband, Patricius, who was unfaithful and dismissive of her Christian beliefs. Yet through her prayer, patience, and gentle witness, Monica eventually saw her husband embrace the faith before his death.

Monica's greatest trial, however, came from her eldest son, Augustine, who lived a life far from God. Despite his worldly lifestyle and rejection of the faith, Monica never gave up on him. For years, she prayed, fasted, and wept for his conversion, clinging to the hope that God would touch his heart. Her prayers were answered when Augustine experienced a profound conversion, becoming not only a Christian but one of the greatest theologians and saints in Church history.

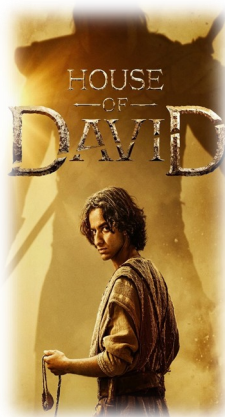

St. Monica's life teaches us that hope is deeply intertwined with prayer and trust in God's timing. Even when our circumstances seem hopeless, Monica reminds us that no one is beyond God's reach. Her unwavering faith and perseverance inspire us to remain hopeful, even in the face of long delays and apparent setbacks. For anyone praying for a loved one's return to God, Monica serves as a reminder that hope, rooted in prayer, has the power to transform lives.
