

How Much Does a Shower Remodel Cost?

Houzz 2020

A shower renovation costs about $5,500 to $15,500+, depending on the extent of the remodeling work.

All types of shower remodels include a modification of two core components: full showers and shower and tub combinations.

Full showers are more suited for adult homes where most people take quick and convenient showers and they are especially popular with those who are aging in place. Shower and tub combinations suit families with younger children or pets, where the children or pets can be washed in the tub and adults can also enjoy the convenience of a quick bath.

To remodel a shower and tub combination, expect to incur about $2,500 to $3,200 for fiberglass shower surround. Included in this cost are the installation expenses (about $1,000), which include plumbing fixtures (but not demolition of existing shower set ups or relocation of plumbing). This is for a tub/shower surround only and doesn't include shower door costs. If you are considering tiling the shower walls, adding inlaid niches and seamless shower doors the price changes considerably to averages of about $6,800 up to $14,500 or more depending upon the type of tile and upgrades you add. This includes the price of demolition and install.

Full showers (or stand-alone shower surround) typically cost about $800 to $1,600 (for a fiberglass surround) and then you have to pay for install, demolition and plumbing. This also does not include the cost for shower doors or install. But, if you are considering a full shower makeover where you are removing the old shower pan, adding new fixtures, tiling walls and flooring and adding seamless shower doors the price can range anywhere from $6,500 to $12,00,+. Typically, seamless shower doors with install run around $2,000-$2,500 of this cost.

For a full open walk in shower that does not require shower doors the averages range from $6,800 for smaller walk-ins to $16,800+ for full access / spa type showers.
