PROVOLETA

In Argentina, a thick slice of provoleta, a provolone-type cheese, is cooked over coals until browned and bubbling, then served as an appetizer with bread. It's like fondue or queso fundido but not quite as molten and melty.

Ingredients

14 ounces provolone cheese; cut 1-inch thick
1 tsp fresh oregano leaves
½ tsp red pepper flakes
Sourdough bread toasted

Instructions

Scatter some oregano and red pepper flakes onto the top of the provolone, pressing down gently so they stick.

Heat a 5-7 inch cast iron skillet over medium-high flame. Lay the cheese in the skillet, unseasoned side down. Cook for a couple of minutes, or until it gets nice and golden on the bottom.

Flip the cheese over with a spatula and cook the other side as well, until it all melts and fills the skillet.

To serve, garnish with more oregano leaves and red pepper flakes.

Dip the toasted sourdough bread in the cheese and ENJOY!
