

Tonight during worship I had a vision. I am not normally one for having visions, but this one was undeniable for me. I wondered how or when I would share it, and while driving home I felt I should share it on here.

In the vision a person was climbing stairs with great difficulty but commitment. As the person reached the top of a flight of stairs and was about to start climbing the next flight, but God stopped the person and said no more stairs.

As the person looked past the stairs there was an escalator, but the Lord kept the person from using the escalator. God's plan was for the person to take the elevator and to begin going up at a more rapid rate. It was apparent in the vision that God was responding to the faithfulness of the one climbing by raising them up at His pace.
