New! Students For Social Change!—Ms. Rivera/Mr. Hohmann

Arising from a social movement tradition, Youth Participatory Action Research ties a study of relevant issues affecting students' lives and constructive action to better the world at the community level. Students' needs and desires shape the issues studied and actions taken. Advisors guide this process as students work with educators, activists, local leaders, and concerned community members interested in the issues and actions students identified and developed strategies to address. By building a culture of solidarity, students' research and action can effect meaningful social change. If you want to make a difference in your community, Students for Social Change wants you!
