

Sent by email and by post

Protection Approaches

Edinburgh House

170 Kennington Lane

London, SE11 5DP

+44 (0) 20 3859 9509

www.protectionapproaches.org

12th November 2019

Dear party leaders,

We write as members of the UK Civil Society Atrocity Prevention Working Group and as representatives of organisations that work, in many different ways, to reduce the risks of mass atrocities worldwide. We write to ask each of you to make a clear commitment to preventing atrocity crimes in your party manifesto and during this election campaign.

Genocide, war crimes, ethnic cleansing and crimes against humanity diminish us all. They carry an untold cost of human suffering and can often be predicted and prevented. They can also affect the UK's own security and prosperity through international instability and the threat of terrorism.

In July 2019, Her Majesty's Government set out for the first-time a cross-cutting national approach to preventing mass atrocities, making clear that the responsibility lies across the Department for International Development as well as the Foreign Office and Ministry of Justice. The approach recognises that British atrocity prevention cannot be restricted to crisis response.

However, any effective policy on atrocity prevention requires clear Ministerial responsibility for the portfolio, cross-Whitehall coordination and analysis, and transparent process within party policy development. Likewise, any national approach to preventing atrocities requires cross-party consensus and support.

Preventing identity-based violence and mass atrocities is a matter that begins at home and extends around the world. It requires participation from all internationally-facing departments as well as from domestic institutions that are responsible for upholding obligations to populations within and at Britain's borders.

We therefore recommend that all parties during this important general election;

- Support a national inquiry on the UK's capabilities and responsibilities to help prevent identity-based violence and mass atrocities abroad
- Support a feasibility assessment of a cross-departmental prevention analysis unit
- Pledge to integrate an explicit commitment on the prevention of identity-based violence from discrimination to violent extremism and mass atrocities. This commitment would cut across portfolios and bureaus of policy interests, including international development, communities and local government, justice, trade, foreign policy, and migration and refugee issues

Preventing atrocities is a matter of conscience, not partisanship. It is a responsibility that is shared, and an agenda that should be prioritised by all political parties; it is a commitment that can never belong to one party or another.

We call on you to commit in the lead up to the 2019 general election, and irrespective of its outcome, to prioritise the prevention of atrocity crimes, not only as a matter of strategic national interest, but as a goal that reflects the UK's internationalist values.

Sincerely,

Mark Farmaner, Director, Burma Campaign

Robert Bain, Program Officer, Ceasefire Centre for Civilian Rights

Cristina Stefan & Adrian Gallagher, Co-Directors, European Centre for the Responsibility to Protect

Catherine Anderson, CEO, Jo Cox Foundation

Dylan Mathews, CEO, Peace Direct

Kate Ferguson, Co-Executive Director, Protection Approaches

Waqar Azmi, Chairman, Remembering Srebrenica

Mariana Goetz, Director, Rights for Peace

Elizabeth Nelson, Director, Search for Common Ground UK

Richard Gowing, Director, Sri Lanka Campaign for Peace & Justice

Kellie Strom, Syria Solidarity UK

Fred Carver, Head of Policy, United Nations Association - UK

Jacqueline Geis, CEO, Videre est Credere

Maddy Crowther, Co-Executive Director, Waging Peace

Protection Approaches convenes the UK Civil Society Atrocity Prevention Working Group. To respond or get in touch with the signatories please contact Hugo.Lucas@protectionapproaches.org