

ENGAGING STUDENTS AND BUILDING COMMUNITY IN REMOTE CLASSES

This interactive workshop will introduce some exercises you can use to engage students and build community in remote classes. We will try out and discuss some exercises adapted from improvisational theater to promote development of skills important for teaching and learning, including communicating, collaborating, and getting comfortable making and building on mistakes. Please be prepared to participate and turn on your video camera.

Eischen is an associate professor in the Mathematics Department at the University of Oregon. She also has completed extensive training in improvisation, including the improv programs at Chicago's iO Training Center and The Second City and courses at New York's Upright Citizen's Brigade and the Magnet Theater.