

Never Enough

Over the weekend, my family had the opportunity to serve food at a local evangelism outreach. Each one of us was put to work behind the table – we’ve never been a part of something like that – all together – it was hard work and it was rewarding all in the same and as I’m looking back at it – I couldn’t be more proud of my girls – they jumped right in and took a station and stayed with it until the crowds died down. Never once did they complain.

When I finally had a minute to sit down and watch everything going on – I was so pleased and filled in my heart to see the turn out – and how everyone had gathered to put together this event. People we didn’t even know – working side by side.

When I finally had a moment to talk to one of the helpers who was laboring next to me – I said “wow – this is just great – what a wonderful turn out – even bigger than the last event!” and he said “I just hope someone had a chance to witness because if not, this was all for nothing.”

Ever heard the term “wet-blanket”? That sentence stuck in my spirit and I thought – how wrong and how skewed your vision is of this whole outreach! We joined together to SERVE in joy and w/o complaint – there was all free – face painting, moon-bounce, food, snow-cones, popcorn, live rapping, music and gifts for the children & he thinks there wasn’t evangelism?

As I pulled Gary to the side and told him we needed to get going so we could head to our next family gathering – we walked around the church to our car and right there on the sidewalk were two different groups of ministry – people praying and ministering to those in need – right there on the ground!

I’m starting this week by saying: NEVER UNDER-ESTIMATE OUR GOD! He is bigger, stronger, greater, wiser and ABLE – to turn what seems like very little effort on our part into something that is long-lasting and worth the two hours of serving chicken and hotdogs. Each part we play – is another step in taking care to grow the plantings of the Lord and be His hands and feet – Friends – don't ever say it's "Never Enough" – because when we are living for Jesus – NOTHING is wasted.
