Biography

Willett was born December 19, 1924 in Verona Township, the third son of 12 living children of the late Fred and Edith (Mattice) Harris. He married Joyce Elaine Smith on August 25, 1951 in Detroit. They were married for 56 years and faced the adventures and tribulations of life, always together. Joyce preceded him in death on January 23, 2007. Willett was a kind and loving man with a deep sense of wisdom. He was a good husband and father, always steady and calm. He was known as exceptionally strong in his youth and was a champ at hitting the Strongman bell at the Fair. He was a proud member of the Moose Club. As a young man, he and his father walked into Bad Axe from Verona to paint and wallpaper homes. Then he worked for the Hebner Gravel Company, later working for Universal Engineering. When Universal closed, Willett and 16 other men were able to buy the factory, now named Huron Tool and Engineering. For several years they, as the stockholders, were able to reap the rewards of their labor before the factory was taken away from them. In his earlier years, he was often quiet, but then would come out with a humorous joke that was so unexpected everyone was rolling on the floor. He had a gruff demeanor that made some adults wary at first until they got his warmth and humor, but babies were immediately drawn to him, not fooled for a moment. He was always a homebody and loved nature and growing flowers. In his later years, many hours were spent watching birds and squirrels on his birdfeeder. He loved dogs and was often seen walking them.
